

ORGANIZATIONAL INTERCOMMUNICATION OF CORPORATE MANAGEMENT PRINCIPLES AND TRANSFORMATION PROCESSES IN ENVIRONMENT OF TNC

The article examines the question of organizational intercommunication between the necessity of realization of corporate transformations for the environment of multinational corporations and inhibition of principles of corporate management, that guarantee maintenance of interests of shareholders of corporation and high level of quality of such transformations.

The aim of the article is a necessity of consideration of processes of transformation of TNC in form operations of mergers and acquisitions, characteristic of the world laws realizations of similar processes, exposure of their conformities to law and progress trends, and also questions related to the estimation of efficiency and risks of realization of such corporate transformations.

Corporate transformations need to be understand as a process of organizationally- economic transformation of TNC, composition of legal entities of corporate right holders (as a rule composition and structure of shareholders of corporation) changes at that. To the main types of corporate transformations it is necessary to take: confluence, absorption, selection and corporate division.

It is well-proven that the world practice of corporate management formed clear principles of corporate behaviour, such as: principle of the limited liability, principle of opening of information, centralized management, free procedure of transmission of shares.

It is reasonable, that exactly these principles are the universal basis of development and realization of strategy of corporate transformation, especially at the usage of operations of mergers and acquisitions; inhibition of these principles avouches both parties of corporate relations of maintenance of corporate laws and promises in the future regardless of consequences of completion of corporate agreements.
